

Danielle Levredge

Danielle is a lifelong Delawarean who has spent her career turning complex issues into conversations that inspire action. Her work has encompassed a broad range of experiences including teaching middle school science in inner-city Wilmington with Teach For America, providing environmental education with the Peace Corps in Paraguay, managing volunteer and intern programs with Brandywine Zoo and Delaware State Parks, and most recently, co-leading digital strategy and social media communications for the ACLU of Delaware. Across more than a decade of mission-driven work with organizations including Delaware Humanities, The Nature Conservancy, and AmeriCorps, Danielle has focused on amplifying marginalized voices, building community engagement, and aligning storytelling with fundraising and long-term growth.

Danielle became deeply interested in Montessori education when her child reached school age and she began seeking alternative models rooted in experiential learning and inclusive, intersectional environments. As an active Sussex Montessori parent and Seaford native, she is personally invested in the success of the Early Childhood Learning Center and the expansion of Montessori access in her hometown. She is honored to support Montessori Works through strategic marketing that strengthens community connection and advances its mission.
